An Analysis of Developmental Programmes : Impacts and Challenges

*Ms. Vijaylaxmi Gupta**

Introduction

The process of development has been started in India after independence. Before independence, condition of different sectors in economy was not so good. There was a massive drain of wealth from Indian economy to England during the rule of British Empire. That ruling period damaged the domestic trade and industry; worsen agriculture and made condition of economy pathetic. Independence brought a new wave in the economy. Our policy maker had a deep thought over the coming plans and programmes. There were several models of development have been implemented in the economy during various plans. Broadly, development can be define as social and economic growth through an organised and plan manner and main motive of development is to control poverty and unemployment, to improve education and health conditions and to generate better environment for the trade and commerce.

To achieve the goal of development several development programmes were initiated in the economy. The main objectives of all those programmes were to provide basic needs of life like food, shelter, education, health etc and to provide protection from the natural adverse
