Perspectives on Curriculum Towards Strengthening Public Administration Education

*Dr. Manisha Mathur

The academic curriculum is an essential component of an educational institution. The curriculum sets out not only the content of each course but also the interconnectedness and sequence of courses to systematically provide the learners with a rational process of acquiring and building upon their know-how and skills over a specified period of time. A carefully planned and well-structured curriculum provides a strong foundation for quality delivery of education. Serious curriculum design involves a long and iterative process. Poor curriculum designs achieve minimal educational benefits. The curriculum should be able to efficiently and economically provide the desired learning outcomes. Curriculum development is a complex process. It requires iteration, perseverance, and most important, the technical expertise to get it going. Pitfalls can be avoided by observing the principles and logical process of curriculum design, applying bench marking and continuous improvement techniques, and enhancing learner participation in curriculum development.
